

Education and the World Wide Web

The Web has grown enormously in the last few years and anything written about it is out of date almost immediately. We encourage you to constantly search the web for new sites. Here is a brief list of some sites that you may want to use.

www.usfca.edu/library

This is the USF Library Home Page. It provides links to Ignacio, the online catalog, information about the library, links to other libraries catalogs, search engines, and also a link to the Library's Reference Databases. From this page you can email us a reference question, request an item on interlibrary loan, and request an appointment to meet with a librarian.

The USF Library's Education databases are listed at:

<http://www.usfca.edu/library/research/ed.html>

On this page, you'll find links to various Education databases, such as Dissertation Abstracts, PsycINFO, Education Full Text, and ERIC.

www.education-world.com

A site with links to lots of education sources. Contains a search engine specifically for education topics.

www.lib.berkeley.edu/EDP/education.html

UC Berkeley's Education web resources page

mel.org/education/education-index.html

The Michigan Electronic Library's Education Subject Index

www.educationindex.com

Lots of links to education sites. Lets you search by "LifeStage" for educational resources.

www.ets.org/testcoll/index.html

The Educational Testing Service (ETS) Test Collection database contains information about over 20,000 tests and research instruments from the early 1990s to the present. It does not have the text of tests, but it does describe the instruments and provide availability information.

www.askeric.org

AskEric lets you submit topics for research and they will do a simple ERIC search for you and also suggest other sources.

www.unl.edu/buros/

Buros Institute of Mental Measurements has links to the ETS Test Collection, a test review locator, quick guides to using Mental Measurements and Tests in Print.

nces.ed.gov
